About the Conference

Rehabilitation professionals play a critical role in the promotion, maintenance, and restoration of abilities in people with disabilities. During pandemics, there is a global tendency towards refocusing rehabilitation services away from institutional settings and towards family and community-based settings. Catering to the requirements of society and those with disabilities is something that rehabilitation specialists are being asked to fulfil with increasing frequency of. To raise the standard of services offered to those with disabilities, rehabilitation professionals must update their knowledge.

Researchers have defined the community-based model as a framework that aims to foster clients' capacity to realize their goals and foster true community membership. These objectives are met through a partnership between the professional and the client, which emphasizes the client's power and deemphasizes the professional's influence. As a result, client and family autonomy is valued more highly than a worker's directive prescription of interventions and goals. Individual clients' requirements and goals are taken into account when providing services, and those needs are met holistically rather than piecemeal.

The Conference will assist in developing national, regional, and international strategies for advancing community-based rehabilitation facilities for people with disabilities through the sharing and exchange of information on the most recent advancements in the field among experts from across the nation.

The Conference's aims are;

- 01 ▶ Updating Knowledge and Abilities
- 02 ▶ Community-Based Mainstreaming
- 03 ▶ Research Projects for Students
- 04 ▶ Knowledge Sharing Among Professionals
Sharing Discoveries
- 05 ▶ Educational Strategies During the Pandemic
- 06 ▶ Research During the Pandemic
